Washington, D.C.

Dear Mr. Eberstadt:

I wish to confirm our conversation of last Monday and our understanding that we will keep in close touch with each other in connection with the work of our respective committees so far as they relate to the National Intelligence set-up.

As I told you, our group has not yet reduced its conclusions to definitive form as we are still in process of completing the assembly of the data on which our report will be based. Hence, at this stage I doubt whether it would be particularly useful for your committee to have any of us appear before it. I trust, however, that the helpful exchange of views we have already been having can continue between us and the members of the respective staffs of our committees.

Faithfully yours,

A. W. Dulles
